

Long Point Waterfowl is pleased to offer a classic
work of waterfowl literature:
“To Ride the Wind” by H. Albert Hochbaum

H. Albert Hochbaum was a pioneer of waterfowl research, art and writing. He was instrumental in the early development of the Delta Waterfowl Station and in the training of many of our highly acclaimed waterfowl scientists and managers. Richard Bonnycastle was Al's lifelong friend and has been a generous philanthropist for waterfowl research and management for decades. Richard convinced Al to write To Ride the Wind and has now generously donated 5,000 copies to Long Point Waterfowl to help support our research and conservation efforts. Proceeds from this book will help Long Point Waterfowl in our endeavor to train future resource management professionals and to instill in youth a keen interest in wildlife ecology, resource conservation/management, and our hunting heritage. The book and plates have been reproduced in a beautiful 120 page coffee table format. Below, we have provided excerpts from the Introduction, Preface and Forward as well as an order form. We hope that you enjoy these wonderful writings as well as the opportunity to learn what drives waterfowl To Ride the Wind.

“I discussed with Al a book that might be done of his paintings. It would follow the migration path of his favorite duck, the Canvasback, from its breeding grounds in western Canada, through the Delta Marsh, to Long Point in Ontario, and on to its wintering grounds in Chesapeake Bay. Now in 2008, to assist the Long Point Waterfowl and Wetlands Research Fund finance its program. ... I am reprinting the original book in support of these worthy endeavours.”

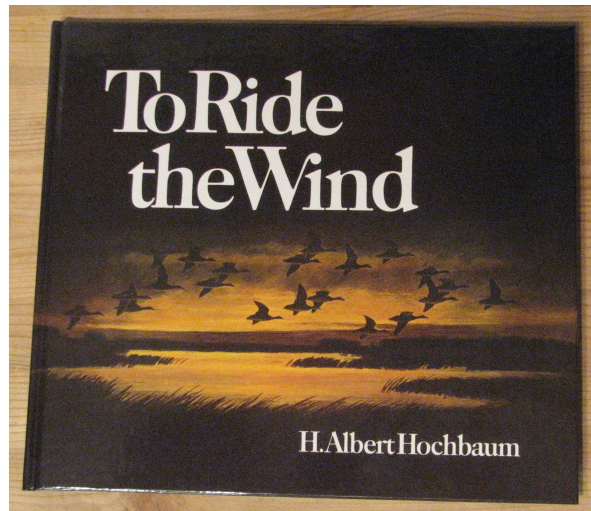

Richard Bonnycastle, Introduction “To Ride the Wind”

“The coincidence of being at Long Point at this time of year and the influence of the watercolours and narrative in To Ride the Wind turned my mind to the need for at once a thoughtful and scientific study of the role of Long Point in waterfowl migration in North America. ... Since the idea for LPW originated in part with To Ride the Wind, I can think of no more fitting tribute to LPW than a copy of this book.”

The Honorable Chief Justice of Ontario, Warren K.
Winkler Chair, Long Point Waterfowl, Forward “To Ride
the Wind”

“It is their destiny to ride the wind that carries them to faraway places. They leave at sundown, dark against the blaze, pursuing their course by measures man does not yet comprehend. This annual rhythm of travel has been the way of waterfowl from the beginning of their time, one hundred million years before Homo sapiens evolved as a human being.”
